It feels like thrash has been around forever, doesn't it? It's easy to ignore it with the cornicopia of different sub-genres today, but we have been living with thrash's aural assault for almost 30 years now. Of course, the fact that I can remember a time before it means I must truly be getting old. But it's true, thrash was conceived in the early eighties and the new DVD Aural Amphetamine explores its inception and the bands that made the genre a household name. This documentary also explores how thrash spawned from the New Wave of British Heavy Metal movement when bands like Motorhead and Venom were pushing the envelope by making music that was more aggressive. It wasn't until this music made its way to US soil - mainly, the Bay Area - that thrash was born.

Aural Amphetamine is a great DVD that takes an in depth look at that glorious head-banging music we all know and love, and the bands that made it what it is today. This disc is full of classic footage from Metallica, Slayer and others, and is also full of cool interviews with the guys that made it as well as the guys that covered it. All in all, a great DVD and history lesson for the newbies out there.

Go. Get. It.

- Ragman wants to jump into Doc Brown's DeLorean and go back to '86 when Metallica ruled the world.

You know initially I thought you two were a couple of douche bags. But now I cannot live without "The Right To Rock" podcast. I love it. I have to say I love your Podcast much better than "other" popular podcast. You guys dig into shit. I could not believe it when I heard Jorn on today. I almost shit myself. I'm 42 and I am a life long metal head. I truly appreciate you guys. Todd

Thanks for all of your compliments, Todd. You keep listening, we'll keep making them. And we want you to know that we never thought of you as a douche bag - ever (John kind of did, but he's sort of a dick anyway).

Hey Todd,

They for the props! It's comments like yours that fuel the fire at The Right to Rock. We will keep the metal and the interviews coming. Thanks for the support! By the way, I passed your db comments on to John and the Mayor, they were pleasantly surprised. Rock On!
