The Who – The Mods and the Quadrophenia connection

The music that shaped a generation

Fans should race to preorder/buy this collection of previously unseen archive footage, news reports, film and video clips and location shoots of The Who and hear interviews with Mod experts and music specialists chronicling the rise to fame of the band.

Heralded as the pioneers of the Mod movement in England during the 60's and 70's, The Who – The Mods and the Quadrophenia connection is a detailed look at the Pete Townsend inspired film and its impact on society (and the band) during their years as one of the most popular acts on the planet.

Quadrophenia, a celluloid snapshot of working class life, political rebellion and youth mentality of the 60's and 70's, is discussed in depth by various contributors or 'players' in the Mod movement. In particular, journalist and biographer, Paulo Hewitt, and Terry Rawlins, founder of Acid Jazz Records.

Bonus material includes Recording Quadrophenia: A recollection with Richard Barnes and contributor biographies.

Well worth the purchase for the serious fan.

Available November 2009 in all good media stores.

Running time – 94 minutes
