CD Review: Siggie Schwarz & Michael Schenker – Live Together

September 1st, 2007 by zzsimonb

When was the last time you heard some good old 'Rock n Roll' on the radio? The answer is, a very long time ago. The North American music scene is suffering from an inertia so great it is threatening to implode on itself. Drowning in a mix of sickly manufactured pop, and objectionable Rap, there seems no light at the end of the tunnel.

I personally think the answer lies in Europe; music is alive and well in Germany and Poland. Siggie Schwarz and Michael Schenker are shining examples of what music is about. Germany has a long history of great bands, and this pair of guitar players show just how well deserved that reputation is.

Innovative they may not be, they do a lot of covers, but the covers are better than the original! Besides which, look at any Orchestra, they all do covers, and no-one grumbles at them!

If you are looking for some great rock and roll, I recommend that you take these guys out for a test drive. Can't Get Enough, is performed so well, the original writer should be proud of these guys. From track one You really got me, I was hooked.

I think we in North America should start the 'Campaign For Real Music' and we should use Siggie and Michael as our mascots.

You can pick up your copy from MVD.
