All My Loving
(Tony Palmer)
By Vish Khanna

Tony Palmer's 1967 BBC television documentary about the rock'n'roll explosion in western civilisation is a treasure trove. In a candid extra, Palmer recalls how he was commissioned to film a piece on the economic and philosophical impact of popular music. The film features stuffy social pundits, hearing specialists and jingle writers going off about the pros and cons of rock music and the spell it cast on a young generation of consumers. A rock fan with one significant contact, Palmer sought help telling the other side of the story. His friend John Lennon hooked him up with associates such as Jimi Hendrix, the Who, Frank Zappa and the Beatles. The rare interview and performance footage is priceless, particularly when coupled with Palmer's antiquated yet starkly experimental style. Frightened by the intense narrative, the BBC aired the film at the end of their broadcast day. Seldom seen, All My Loving finally gets a shot at the audience it richly deserves. (MVD)

Mark Davis - Don't You Think We Should Be Closer? / Mistakes I Meant To Make

It takes real nerve for a relatively unknown artist to simultaneously release two albums, but Davis's gamble has paid off with these stunning tours de force. His work in Edmonton's Old Reliable served notice of his songwriting abilities and they've reached full bloom here. Don't You Think is ... Full Review

The Admirable Interpol

"The Lighthouse" is quite easily the band's biggest departure to date: a sparse number that features only Paul Banks' remote call and some Latin-esque strumming for four of its five minutes. A poor choice in adjective finds Dengler and guitarist Daniel Kessler taking the piss asking me, "Were you incensed? Were you incredulous?" and suggesting I slap them with white gloves. This is an Interpol not too many people get to experience: laughing, joking and pampering a rake-thin puppy.... Read More

The Aggrolites - Reggae Hit L.A.

When America's best reggae band releases a record it's time to celebrate. Reggae Hit L.A. is pure gold from start to finish; it's that rare album that is sure to garner classic status sooner rather than later. Driven by Roger Rivas's bravado on the organ and Jesse Wagner's Muscle Shoals-style... Full Review
