CD Review- National Lampoon Live Un-Censored

April 30th, 2009 • Related • Filed Under

National Lampoon Live Un-Censored features Rich Vos headlining a night of standup that includes comedians Paula Bel, Craig Gass, Joey Diaz and Brian Holtzman.

The vulgarity and politically incorrect disk kicks off with Rich Vos himself, as he discusses growing up Jewish and the stereotypes of other nationalities. Several times he engages the crowd in banter but for some reason, the crowd response seemed like it was taped separately and inserted at another time. Honestly I have heard Rich Vos do standup in the past and this is definately not his best material. He set the bar high on living up to the Un-Censored label on the CD. Well placed blue humor can be really funny, but vulgarity for the sake of vulgarity just gets old really quickly.

I feel that the sign of a good comedian is to take almost any topic and make it funny. The only three topics that are talked about on this disc though are foreigners, prostitutes, homosexuals and sex in general. Just as a disclaimer, I do not fall under any of those categories and was not personally offended by the content, save for Paula Bel's comments on rape which should offend anyone with a brain. It's just that the performers were not funny. Sadly every performer that followed did the same thing, with Paula Bel and Joey Diaz turning out performances that I would have walked out on had I been in the audience. They were not funny, they just seemed to be yelling out insults and random offensive phrases mislabeled as comedy. Craig Gass was the sole performer that I gained any kind of enjoyment from. Of course I am a sucker for any Christopher Walken impersonations and his was really good. Dead on in fact.

One act does not a good comedy cd make and I would have to recommend against this collection. I hope this volume of National Lampoon Live is not indicative of the rest of the collection, as National Lampoon is legendary for bringing the funny.
