Parlor Music Revisited

Music by Semyon and Daniel Kobialka

Wonder of Sound is pleased to announce an album by Semyon and Daniel Kobialka performing a selection of America's best-loved compositions from the late 1800s. "Semyon's arrangements for the duo utilize overdubbing in the colorful and lush harmony lines in an all-acoustic production. The addition of Mason Macias at drums and percussion adds an additional color to the album. Semyon and Daniel take turns carrying the melody while the other plays harmony. The powerful result is a heartfelt and very musical tribute to the legacy of the United States, its history and its future potential." —Scott Yanow

About Semyon Kobialka

Semyon began playing piano and violin when he was three, switching to the cello at the age of nine. While in high school he played bass guitar in the jazz band. After finishing high school he studied at Columbia University. In addition to being classically trained he has played cello in all different types of genres including rock, r&b, salsa, pop, funk and jazz. Semyon sometimes uses his instrument as a cross between a guitar and a bass, and he occasionally sings along with his cello on his original pieces. He has pushed the boundaries of what the cello can do.
