Just like all things Residential, this live DVD takes a much different perspective than most performance video. The footage was shot onstage during the U.S. tour by a black figure who roamed the stage wearing a mysterious contraption.

This odd apparatus, a rig for camera stabilization, facilitated the lengthy shooting times needed to record each night's performance. As a result, the cameraman was able to interact with the performers in real time and, consequently, the footage is not restricted to an audience perspective but freely explores the stage.

The lighting design for the Demons Dance Alone tour created a strong mood during the performance and resulted in additional difficulties for the video taping. The solution was to flood the stage with infrared light and shoot using the camera's Night Mode. However, the IR lights unflinchingly looked into and recorded darkness and shadow. As a result, these problems became the basis for the design of this DVD.

Digital effects were used to bring greater definition to the images on stage and to stylize the individual songs, lifting the production out of the concept of a documentary and into the interpretive world of graphic stylization!
