In February of 1992, GG Allin & the Murder Junkies would continue to pave a bloody path of destruction across the land. GG's shows were becoming more and more violent and confrontational. He started to describe his concerts as a war between him and his audience. His mind was a machine gun, his body the bullets and anyone in the way was the target. Each night, GG would attack an already hostile crowd, creating a riot-like atmosphere. It was without a doubt the most dangerous yet thrilling experience I have ever encountered.

Unfortunately, GG's reign of terror would end abruptly when he was arrested for disorderly conduct and endangering the lives of his audience. He was extradited back to Michigan to serve out the final years of his original prison sentence. The Savage South Tour will go down in history as one of the most violent tours ever. These shows have all of the intensity and insanity people have come to expect from a GG Allin performance... and more. - Merle Allin
